Remember that only a natural person or natural persons can be a Beneficial Owner. The corporate or ownership links within your company must be verified to the extent that the identity of the natural person or natural persons that control you is certain.

In order to determine who your Beneficial Owner is, firstly check whether there is a person or persons within your organization that has direct or indirect control over you through authority that results from legal or factual circumstances which allow the person to exercise a decided influence on any actions or measures you may undertake.

If you are a limited company or a private stock company, your Beneficial Owner may be one of the following:

- a. Any natural person who, as a stakeholder or shareholder, has legal ownership of more than 25% of your company's total stakes or shares;
- b. Any natural person who holds more than 25% of the total voting rights within the company's authoritative body, including as a pledgee, usufructuary or under agreement with other persons entitled to vote;
- c. Any natural person that controls a legal person or legal persons who between them have legal ownership of more than 25% of your company's total stakes or shares, or hold more than 25% of the total voting rights within the company's body, including as a pledgee, usufructuary or under agreement with other persons entitled to vote;
- d. Any natural person who exercises ultimate control.

When identifying your Beneficial Owner you must decide which of the above circumstances is relevant. In case more than one of the above is relevant, you should decide which subject has the greater authority.

Should you find that none of the circumstances in points a to d above are relevant in your case, your Beneficial Owner will be the person who occupies the most senior management position.

If you are a trust, your Beneficial Owner is the founder, trustee, caretaker (where established), beneficiary or other person in control of the trust.

If you are a natural person that runs their own business and there are no indications or circumstances that suggest that another natural person or persons has control over you, you will also be recognised as the company's Beneficial Owner.
